Next Meeting – August 14th

Our next meeting will be held on Wednesday, August 14th, at 7:00 p.m. in the lyceum at the Center of Southwest Studies at Fort Lewis College. After a brief business meeting, Richard Friedman will present: “Using Computer Technology to aid in the Identification, Documentation, and Visualization of the Chacoan Landscape (Built Environment).” There will be a social at 6:30 p.m. in the CSWS foyer.

Richard Friedman combines diverse skillsets in geology, remote sensing, archaeology, and new digital technologies to study the Chaco world. He worked with the Navajo Nation Chaco Sites Protection Program to document countless Great Houses and roads throughout the Four Corners region. Friedman is also a remote sensing expert who has studied Chaco roads for over 30 years using a variety of techniques including low sun angle aerial photography, thermal infrared multispectral imaging (TIMS), and most recently, Light Detection and Ranging (LiDAR) and Structure from Motion (SfM) photogrammetry. He has published articles on Chaco roads, the Newcomb field system, the built environment of downtown Chaco, and Chaco’s minimal agricultural productivity. Friedman appears in the 1999 Solstice Project documentary The Mystery of Chaco Canyon.

Volunteer Opportunities

We need two more volunteers to help with the August 14th pre-meeting social. Please email Susan Hicks at hicks@animas.net or call 970-759-7152 if you would like to help.

September 14th John W. Sanders Lecture: We need two more volunteers from 5:30 - 7:00 p.m. the evening of the lecture. Your assistance with this event would be greatly appreciated. Please contact Rhonda Raffo at 970-259-8870 or rhondaandjim@msn.com.
Need volunteers to learn how to operate the new AV system at the Lyceum.

CSWS has a completely new and different AV system in the Lyceum and we need to have a couple of members trained in how to set it up for our guest speakers. If you are a regular participant at our monthly meetings and would be willing to learn the new system and get it set up at our meetings, please contact Janice at janicesheftel@gmail.com. Ideally, we would have several members trained to do this.

SJBAS makes a difference

Janice,

Did I mention to you that one of our alumni, Molly Dickensen, spoke at our AHS fundraiser last spring about how attending a lecture sponsored by SJBAS (on the recommendation of her Humanities teacher, Ashley Carruth) piqued her interest in the field, and she’s now graduated with an archaeology degree from FLC?

Field Trip Report – Local Rock Art – Ute Mountain Ute Tribal Park – July 11, 2019

Our group of sixteen SJBAS members, plus Layne Miller and his family, met at the Twin Buttes Trailhead parking area to arrange carpools for the drive to the Ute Mountain Ute Visitor Center south of Cortez. Layne was our presenter for our July 10th SJBAS meeting; his area of expertise is Archaic, Fremont and Ute rock art. We rendezvoused at the Visitor Center for our 9:00 a.m. half-day tour of ancestral Puebloan, Ute and Navajo rock art in Mancos Canyon. Our guide was Ricky Hayes, a well-known guide from the Ute Mountain Ute tribe.

After squaring away our tour payment, most of the group piled into the Tribal Park van and we headed into Mancos Canyon, the large drainage on the southern edge of Mesa Verde National Park. After driving about ten miles we stopped at our first rock art site. Numerous ancestral Puebloan and Ute panels were scattered along the sandstone cliff faces along the canyon. Our intrepid group scrambled along keeping up with Ricky despite the 96-degree July heat. Many of the petroglyphs were random clan symbols, but Ricky spent a lot of time describing a solstice marker that worked for the summer and winter solstices. Ricky is full of stories and he does a stream of consciousness version of the Hopi creation stories that many believe also relate to the ancestral Puebloans. As Paula later shared, “We are fortunate to get the stories, interpretations and oral tradition from our Native American guides. As outsiders, we get impatient to get moving but our good fortune is getting the oral tradition and interpretation of the rock art.” Layne left early due to a previous commitment, but the group soldiered on as far as Kiva Point.

Archaeologists find new sites at Lone Mesa State Park

On a low, grassy ridge near a ponderosa pine forest north of Dolores, archaeologists and volunteers identified stones last week that Native Americans likely shaped more than 1,000 years ago. The site where the team found artifacts, including century-old metal debris from a logging company, was one of the undocumented sites found over two weeks in July at Lone Mesa State Park by a team led by experts from the Colorado Office of Archaeology & Historic Preservation. The team of 26 people surveyed about 450 acres in the 11,760-acre park on foot in a grid pattern, gathering data that could eventually be used to help manage the park, if it opens to the public. – Durango Herald (Read article)

Another Important Step Toward Protecting Greater Chaco, Grand Canyon

Congress has taken an important step toward permanently protecting two national treasures in the American West. The House Natural Resources Committee approved H.R. 1373, the Grand Canyon Centennial Protection Act, which will withdraw a million acres from future mining of uranium and minerals around the Grand Canyon. It also passed H.R. 2181, the Chaco Cultural Heritage Area Protection Act, which protects Chaco Canyon from oil and gas development. – Los Alamos Daily Post Read article

Lawmakers Advance Legislation to Curtail Trafficking of Sacred Cultural Items

A group of U.S. lawmakers made another push Thursday to ban collectors and vendors from exporting Native American ceremonial items to foreign markets, including Paris, where there has been uproar over auction houses listing tribal pieces for sale over the years. The lawmakers introduced legislation that would increase penalties within the United States for trafficking objects that tribes hold sacred by increasing prison time from five years to 10 years for violating the law more than once. At the same time, the bill would establish a framework for collectors to return protected items to tribes and avoid facing penalties. – Washington Post (Read article)

Commentary and Analysis: Hidden Agenda behind BLM’s Move to Colorado?

Two former Bureau of Land Management directors say plans to move the agency’s headquarters to Colorado are an early step toward abolishing the entire agency and transferring millions of acres of federal land to the states. “I think the endgame is to try to make it almost impossible to manage these public lands,” said former BLM Director Robert V. Abbey, who served in the Obama administration from 2009-2012. “It’s just another step that they are taking that will add credence to those advocates that say these lands should be managed by the states.” – Bloomberg Environment (Read article)

Bears Ears Monument Management Plan Roundly Denounced

Nearly two years after dramatically shrinking the Bears Ears National Monument in Utah, the Trump administration finalized a management plan Friday that would allow trees to be plowed down using heavy chains, as well as utility lines and more ranching, in the smaller area that is still preserved. The new plan for the nearly 202,000-acre expanse of public land, which removes five Native American tribes from the management board of a monument they fought to designate, drew immediate protest from conservation and tribal groups. – Washington Post (Read article)

The U.S. government has decided to allow off-road vehicles access to archaeologically sensitive land at a Utah national monument that houses sacred tribal sites under a plan announced Friday. The Bureau of Land Management’s plan for the Bears Ears National Monument says that certain historic sites most at risk will be off limits, but the agency chose an alternative that closes about 42 square miles to off-road vehicles. That’s far less than a different option that would have closed nearly 184 square miles. – CBS News (Read article)

“Bears Ears is a treasure that everyone should be able to enjoy and should be protected for future generations who hold it sacred,” said Rep. Deb Haaland, D-N.M., head of the Subcommittee on National Parks, Forests and Public Lands and one of the first Native American women elected to Congress. “However, this administration’s management plan only reinforces its illegal action to steal huge swaths of land from the national monument so that oil and gas and mining companies can exploit the land. It puts sacred sites at risk of being lost forever.” – Salt Lake Tribune (Read article)

Commentaries on the Monument Management Plan

To be honest, Archaeology Southwest had low expectations for the final version of this plan. But, upon seeing it, we are further discouraged and disappointed by what it implies about broken processes and ruinous priorities for the management of our public lands. – Archaeology Southwest (Read article)

Overall, despite the advocacy of FCM and many others, the final plan fails to provide the area with robust protections enjoyed by national monuments across the country. Conversely, in some cases, the plan actually reduces protections this internationally significant landscape enjoyed before being included in Trump’s monument. – Friends of Cedar Mesa (Read article)
Just as numerous reports have shown that the reductions were in fact focused on drilling and mining, this proposed plan shows that the BLM misled the public when claiming that a reduced boundary would allow them to better manage and protect what they considered to be the most important historic landmarks, historic and prehistoric structures, and other objects of historic or scientific interest monument objects in the Bears Ears region. – Conservation Lands Foundation (Read article)

New BLM Acting Head Is No Friend of Public Lands

An ardent critic of the federal government who has argued for selling off almost all public lands has been named the Trump administration’s top steward over nearly a quarter-million federally controlled acres, raising new questions about the administration’s intentions for vast Western ranges and other lands roamed by hunters, hikers and wildlife. Interior Secretary David Bernhardt on Monday signed an order making Wyoming native William Perry Pendley acting head of the Bureau of Land Management. – Associated Press (Read article)

Commentary: BLM Move Is Not a Good Thing

County commissioners in the rural American West possess the daunting authority of Afghan warlords, it’s been said. They wield their power by demanding federal agencies do their bidding in the vast expanse of public lands in which the counties are embedded. Too often, they have their way. Last week, the Trump administration announced a plan to move the Bureau of Land Management’s top officials out of Washington and into regional western offices. The scheme will only exaggerate the influence of county commissioners, to the detriment of most Americans. – Los Angeles Times (Read article)
